Steeping Whest Seed.

"Crocked" Brandy in Parts.

A pair ot precious plan for would-be violators of the custom lawa. They were in the habit of going around among tavern-keepers and others with among tavern-keepers and others with among tavern-keepers and others with samples of untaxed brandy would offer confidentially at a low figure. When they made a sale they would bring with great secrecy a fifty quart cask to the purchaser, telling him at the sample. This the latter would do, and make a number of gimlet holes, through all of which the genuine articles trickled forth. The brandy would then be seen to be botted. All would go well the few gallons, and then the run of brandy would case. On shaking the cask, a sound would be heard of gurging liquid. But nothing would come through the fifty litre cask a smaller one, holding forty-eight litres was suspended, until of water. Only as much brandy had been provided as would fill the space.

Steeping Wheat Seed.

The small cost and labor of steeping the seed is well repaid by the security it affords against rust and smut, and the quickening of germination. A steep that is very effective against smut is a solution of four ounces of sulphate of copper (blue vitrioi) to a galion of water. This is poured over the wheat, heaped on the barn floor, and the grain is rapidly shoveled over and mixed, until every seed is moistened with the solution. It is left in a heap for twenty-four hours, after which it may be sown. A solution of one pound of guane to a pail of rain water, or stale chamber lye, is an excellent steep, not only preventing the smut, but hastening the sprouting of the seed. Ground gypsum (plaster) should be used to dry the grain previous to sowing, if anything is needed, but lime should not be used with guane, water or lye. Strong sait and water is frequently used as a steep, with good effect; after which the seed is mixed with finely slaked lime until dry, and sown immediately.
